Capybara website meeting notes:

I think the website concept is very clear, using similar images and consistent color palette in the homepage.
For the header and description (The Capybara part), I want to make it as the first thing to look at when the user opens the website. The background image and white font make it a bit hard to read. Also, I think the navigation bar can be more visible. (Maybe making it thicker and enlarging font size?) Other than that, I love the zigzag layout of the images and comfy, calm aesthetic of the homepage. However, I am wondering how it would look from the phone screen size. Would the image and text be arranged vertically?
